SENIOR SEMINAR IN FOREIGN POLICY

• ITS PURPOSES
AND
ITS MEMBERSHIP

AN OBJECTIVE: Updating knowledge of the USA

In addition to reviewing foreign policy problems, an important phase of the Seminar's study program is designed to bring up-to-date the Membership's knowledge of the latest social, economic, scientific and industrial developments in the USA. Officers serving the United States abroad do their best to keep up with the dynamic changes taking place in this country, but they can represent the United States better if they possess recent, first-hand experience, acquired while listening on the spot to the views of eminent educators, industrialists, scientists, business and labor leaders, social workers, governors, mayors and law enforcement authorities. During their ten months of study, Members also perform individual travel to the regions of the world in which they have a special interest and prepare, as a result of their travel, case studies and reports useful to the Agencies of the U.S. Government.

An Advanced Training Program

The Senior Seminar in Foreign Policy, held annually since 1958, is a component of the Foreign Service Institute, Department of State. The Senior Seminar is the most advanced program of studies in international relations and foreign policy offered by any agency of the United States Government. Each session, which lasts from August to June, is limited to an honor group of about 25 senior officials. Half of these are career officers of the American Foreign Service, who are being trained for important field assignments such as Chiefs of Mission or Deputy Chiefs of Mission and comparable posts in the Department of State. The other half are officers possessing an equal degree of achievement and length of service, nominated by the Army, Navy, Air Force, Marine Corps and other U.S. Government Departments and Agencies in Washington.

The average age of Members is in the mid-40's. Their average length of U.S. Government service is 23 years.

Membership in the Seminar is awarded on the basis of excellence of performance, demonstrated leadership and potential for the assumption of greater responsibilities.
